Research Summary:

Current research activity focuses on the use of nanoscale x-ray diffraction microscopy as a probe of local structural physics in materials. This is associated with multiple related areas: observation of nanoscale phase phenomena in active materials, observation of unique material behavior of nanoscale objects, and observation of emergent critical dynamics in engineered mesoscale material systems.

Selected Recent Publications:

